PRICES AND POLITICS

Republican leaders, gathering in Washington on Thursday to officially inaugurate the campaign, have had been nominated at the Chicago convention, assured him that his prospects were improved by the optimism in Chicago.

Fifty morning Chicago houses started to sell wheat and the price advanced sharply. That probably is the reply of the Chicago grain trade to the Government's threat that it will not buy wheat if the price goes up.

It is also a reminder that the speculative interest in a real factor is increasing what the farmer gets for his products. When the trader is "bearish" the price goes down and the farmer gets less. When he gets optimistic the price goes up and the farmer gets more.

Twice during the last year wheat prices in Canada rose sharply to levels which put money in the farmer's pocket and hope in his outlook. On each occasion they went up because speculators bought wheat at prices higher than were justified by any increase in demand or shortening of supply. Those who bought at the high levels later on were sorry, but the farmer had no occasion to regret or rebuke their adventures enterprise.

A MAMMOTH "SPECIAL"

The annual convention number of Industrial Canada, the publication of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, is this year even more impressive than usual. That is an issue of the size and scope can be turned out by a small staff.

It is itself convincing proof that Canada's industrial interests are weathering the storm successfully, with undiminished courage and confidence in the future. The proceedings of the convention of the Association naturally occupy a large section of the magazine, but note has been taken of the holding of the Imperial Conference in London, and the appropriate matter in reference to the manufacturing interests of the Dominion is included in generous measure.

Devoted to facts and figures showing the industrial development of the country, a particularly interesting feature being a large number of excellently illustrated articles dealing with some of the largest industrial establishments.

Arrangements were made to provide all the delegates to the Imperial Conference with copies of this special number. To them, as to all who turn it leaves, the three hundred page magazine must convey a vivid impression of the extent, variety and importance of Canada's manufacturing industries.

Needless to say, the special number represents the last word in the art and science of layout, arrangement, printing, illustrations and general make-up the magazine will bear comparison with any published anywhere in the world. As for the Canadian craftsmanship it is something of which Canadians may be proud.

THE DEBT QUESTION

The executive of the United Farmers of Alberta want a special session of the Legislature called to deal with the question of farmers' indebtedness and the indebtedness of farmers in relation with the present prices of grain.

It is early in the season yet to judge what the prices of grain will be this fall, though the prospect is not encouraging that they will be high. The debt adjustment machinery can be made to prevent undue pressure being brought upon the farmer to force prompt and full payment. And the Legislature in special session can consider the question of debt reduction in the light of more information than is at present available.

That the individuals will have to be reduced, by legislation or agreement, is certain. There is a sharp increase in grain and other farm product prices should occur. That the debts incurred under conditions of these prices should be paid in full with interest and interest on the interest is absolutely hopeless, barring a radical upswing in the prices of the commodities the farmer must sell in order to pay. It would be better, aside for the future credit of the farmers and for those who hold their paper, if the reduction could be made voluntarily and not by statutory enactment.

When the Legislature comes to deal with the subject it will presumably consider the position of those who are not farmers and who have been hit by debts incurred under like conditions. Wages and salaries of town men have gone down in this average as far as the farm product prices. In thousands of the general slump are also entitled to whatever consideration is given to farmers.

SO THIS IS GERMANY.

The Von Papen Government has promulgated a new decree designed to stamp out mob violence and put an end to the bloodthirsty politics that has been rampant in the last two months. The death penalty may be imposed if that is found necessary.

to stop the fighting and may be imposed even in cases where no one has been killed.
That indicates how serious the situation has become. It is a choice, apparently, of severely repressive measures of discipline.

Before Europe broke into the great conflict, the German character was known to the world as one distinguished by orderliness and obedience to law. More than others, the Germans, often surrendered their personal liberty and represented his personal impulses to the will of the state. The law was his accepted rule of conduct, and that law became a fear from respect for authority and recognition that law can safeguard the individual and the state only in proportion as it is observed voluntarily, as spirit as well as letter.

What the war did to Germany is no way shown more clearly than in the change that has come over the German character because of the forces it unleashed and the conditions it brought about. Germany, whose name was once synonymous with regulated authority, order and stability, is now the scene of disturbance and strife, with the Government employing the strongest measures it can devise to check drift into anarchy.

The Passing Show

By J. S. Couper

One good thing has come out of the Imperial Conference at Ottawa, and that is the English voters, men in middle life, had to take a night train out of the capital. They came down to the station from their homes in their pajamas, covered only by their top coats. They stepped into their sleeping berths without having to go through the customary customhouse search of baggage.

What a nice innovation!
George Bernard Shaw, since his recent visit to Russia, has reported on England on hearing to speak Russian.

The report proved Mr. Shaw was sent a postcard to London daily during the stay. He added: "At my age I am a capable learner of anything."
This makes it depressing.

No tragedy among British men of letters equal in poignancy that of the brilliant Oscar Wilde, poet, dramatist and epigrammatist, who tumbled from the very pinnacle of his fame into shame and imprisonment, and who died an outcast from disease and drugs under an assumed name in a mean Paris lodging.

"The Life of Lord Carson" published this month from the pen of the late Edward Marjoribanks (the English name of Lord Carson) tells an interesting story of a meeting between Wilde and Carson, and a neglected invitation. Like the piece of news that is reported to have changed the will of Columbus, this episode in the life of Wilde has not been back to Spain, this episode in the life of Wilde has not been back to Spain, this episode in the life of Wilde has not been back to Spain.

One wet February day, Lord Carson—he was Mr. Carson then—was crossing the Strand near the Temple. A showy two-horse carriage nearly knocked him down. He was splashed heavily with mud. The carriage drove up, and then:

"A tall, stout, elaborately dressed person, with velvet shoes and cuffs to the elbows, stepped out and held his hand. 'Hello, Lord Carson! You are you. Come and dine with me some day at Tite Street.'"

The elaborately dressed person was Oscar Wilde, then at the height of his fame. Carson was hoping that the invitation would be followed by a formal dinner party. But no formal invitation followed. Had Wilde remembered to make good his casual invitation Carson would never have appeared at the dinner party.

Wilde, who had been a member of the House of Commons, had led to Wilde's exposure and criminal prosecution, for Carson made it a rule of his legal practice to accept no dinner party invitation unless the hostess had been previously invited.

Carson appeared in but one murder case in his whole legal career, and he was prosecuted and convicted one Chapman, alias Severin Kluwauk. Many people at the time believed Chapman to be "Jack the Ripper," the perpetrator of the Whitechapel murders. His murders were followed by mutilation.

Two outstanding public trials of Carson's life were of very different sorts, so far as monetary value was concerned. One was the trial of Lord Levesham in a libel action against a London paper, Rufus Isaac, New Lord Reading and ex-Viceroy of India, appeared at the trial. He made an effort to court a settlement for £10,000. Carson fought and raised him in open court till the sum reached £100,000. While bench and jury were engaged in the trial, Carson was in the house of Commons.

Yet it is significant of the British people that far more widespread interest was taken in his conduct than in the trial of Lord Levesham. An Observer, George Archer-Shee, who had been wrongfully accused and expelled from his studies on a charge of stealing a book, posted from the trial of Lord Levesham, was more interested in the trial of Lord Levesham than in the trial of Lord Levesham.

The story of the tremendous legal battle that was waged to secure the vindication of the boy—contending with the powerful House of Lords—moving against the Crown—is one of the most moving in legal history.

According to the headmaster of Lansing College, one of the famous public schools of England, there has been a startling change in public schools in the last few years. The boys are more interested in their studies and less interested in their studies.

Other changes he noted were that while the boys of thirty years ago were tremendously keen on horses and football, and cricket and football, and were daring and mischievous, the boys of today deck themselves up as fearful of loneliness and boredom, despite cricket, play tennis and feel punishment. He suggested that perhaps the war explains why boys born in that period lack devilry and steel and lack the vim, vim, vim, vim.

Mention of Jack the Ripper, recalls another famous murder case, which has Canadian connections. It was the case of the "Hawthorne" murder, which was the case of the "Hawthorne" murder, which was the case of the "Hawthorne" murder.

Health and Diet Advice

By Dr. Frank McCow

ILLNESS FROM WEAK ABDOMINAL WALLS. The relation between the abdominal muscles and vitality has not been stressed as much as it should be in medical text books. In fact, many important medical volumes one may search in vain for any reference to the abdominal muscles. The position of the abdominal organs and the tone of the abdominal wall, it is nevertheless, true that strong abdominal muscles are essential to the health of the good slave. All of our nourishment comes from the abdominal region and most of our organs of elimination are situated in the abdominal region. The abdominal walls make up such important organs as the kidneys, stomach, liver, spleen and intestines may become severely cramped and their functions, therefore, impaired. No person can be really healthy without firm abdominal muscles, and the time used in developing them and preserving their tone is well spent.

Many serious surgical operations have been performed simply because surgeons have not realized the importance of explaining to patients that the abdominal muscles must be kept strong if the patient wishes to remain healthy. The operations of the abdominal region are not the only operations of the abdominal region. The operations of the abdominal region are not the only operations of the abdominal region.

WHEAT PRICES PUSH HIGHER AT WINNIPEG

WINNIPEG, Aug. 15.—Influenced by stronger wheat values at Liverpool and improved shipping conditions, wheat prices here advanced to higher levels today. Some strong throughput values closed as even higher than Saturday's.

For some prices were October 1931, December 1931 and May 1932. Little actual export business could be traced to the pit operators but there appeared to be moderately good support of another grain and offerings were readily absorbed.

At the high levels wheat showed gains of 1 1/2 cents and grain were also higher held to the morning minutes when more wheat came out.

A further drop of 3.00 cents in futures of wheat on ocean passage to Europe was observed in this position decrease in $2.50 on futures on about half the amount of wheat at this time a year ago.

World shipments again were small. A total of 1,630,000 bushels in wheat of all sources, with $1,400,000 bushels from North America.

Cash wheat met a fair demand at slightly better prices. Cattle grain trade was satisfactory.
